Improving the mental health of young people is a priority of the NSW Government. A substantial number of adolescents and young adults have significant mental health problems. Up to 24 per cent of adolescents experience depression by the time they are 18 years old, and young people aged 15–24 years are the group most frequently affected by a first episode of psychosis.1 These mental health disorders have serious consequences for young people and their families including:

- an increased risk of suicide
- an increased risk of hazardous substance use
- disruption to psychological, educational and social development
- strain on relationships.

Mental health problems in young people have been poorly recognised, identified and managed, and there has often been a considerable delay in young people receiving appropriate care. Increasing evidence shows that preventing and intervening early for young people with mental health problems can dramatically improve their immediate and long term health outcomes.1,2

Programs and initiatives for depression and first onset psychosis have been established in area health services across NSW. Getting in Early—A Framework for Early Intervention and Prevention in Mental Health for Young People in NSW is a framework for improving and supporting these initiatives.

Five broad strategies are outlined for mental health promotion, prevention and early intervention in young people:

- developing and coordinating comprehensive programs and services;
- engaging young people and their families and providing comprehensive assessment and management;
- developing and implementing prevention programs;
- educating the community, particularly on depression and related disorders and first onset psychosis in young people;
- monitoring quality and effectiveness.

Getting in Early provides an innovative framework for mental health service delivery for young people. Getting in Early also presents an opportunity to emphasise and maximise mental health services working collaboratively with other agencies towards better mental health for young people in NSW.
