

Supplementary Material

Assessment of yellowtail kingfish (Seriola lalandi) as a surrogate host for the production of southern bluefin tuna (Thunnus maccoyii) seed via spermatogonial germ cell transplantation

Ido Bar^A, Andre Smith^A, Erin Bubner^B, Goro Yoshizaki^C, Yutaka Takeuchi^D, Ryosuke Yazawa^C, Ben Nan Chen^E, Scott Cummins^A and Abigail Elizur^{A,F}

^AGenecology Research Centre, Faculty of Science, Health, Education and Engineering, University of the Sunshine Coast, Maroochydore DC, Qld 4558, Australia.

^BLincoln Marine Science Centre, School of Biological Science, Flinders University, PO Box 2023, Port Lincoln, SA 5606, Australia.

^CDepartment of Marine Biosciences, Tokyo University of Marine Science and Technology, 4-5-7 Konan, Minato-ku, Tokyo 108-8477, Japan.

^DResearch Center for Advanced Science and Technology, Tokyo University of Marine and Science Technology, 670 Banda, Tateyama-shi, Chiba, 294-0308, Japan.

^EClean Seas Tuna Ltd, PO Box 159, Port Lincoln, SA 5606, Australia.

^FCorresponding author. Email: aelizur@usc.edu.au

Video S1. <https://vimeo.com/124275841>. Transplantation of PKH26-labeled southern bluefin tuna spermatogonial cells into a 7 days post hatch yellowtail kingfish larva (Ido Bar 2015).