

Relationships between fire severity and recruitment in arid grassland dominated by the obligate-seeding soft spinifex (Triodia pungens)

Boyd R. Wright^{A,B,C,F} and Roderick J. Fensham^{D,E}

^ANorthern Territory Herbarium, Department of Environment and Natural Resources, Alice Springs, NT 0871, Australia.

^BSchool of Agriculture and Food Science, University of Queensland, St Lucia, Brisbane, Qld 4072, Australia.

^CBotany, School of Environmental and Rural Science, University of New England, Armidale, NSW 2350, Australia.

^DSchool of Biological Sciences, University of Queensland, St Lucia, Brisbane, Qld 4072, Australia.

^EQueensland Herbarium, Mount Coot-tha Road, Toowong, Brisbane, Qld 4066, Australia.

^FCorresponding author. Email: desertecol@desertecol.com

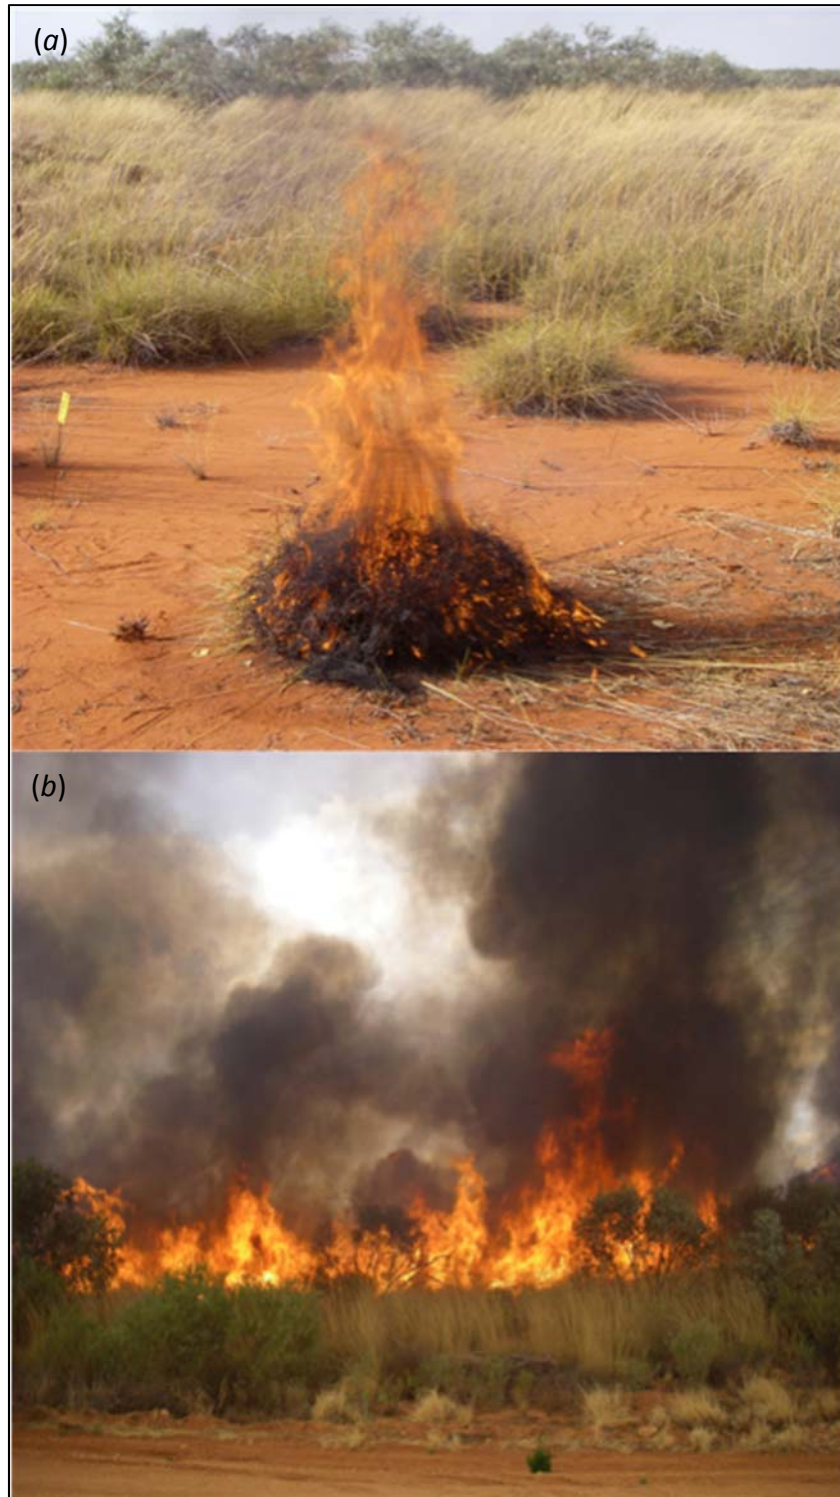

Fig. S1. (a) Low severity experimental burn conducted at Deep Well study site on 3 November 2012; (b) High severity wildfire that occurred at Deep Well study site on 4 November 2012.