

Supplementary Material

Mapping the maternal vaccination journey and influencing factors for Māori women in Aotearoa New Zealand: a qualitative study

Natalie Gauld^{A,}, Samuel Martin (Ngā Puhi)^B, Owen Sinclair (Te Rarawa)^C, Felicity Dumble^D, Helen Petousis-Harris^E and Cameron C. Grant^F*

^ADepartment of Paediatrics: Child and Youth Health, Faculty of Medical and Health Sciences, and School of Pharmacy, The University of Auckland, Auckland, New Zealand

^BHuntly West Pharmacy, Huntly, Waikato, New Zealand

^CPaediatrics, Waitematā District Health Board, Auckland, New Zealand

^DPublic Health, Waikato District Health Board, Waikato, New Zealand

^EDepartment of General Practice, Faculty of Medical and Health Sciences, The University of Auckland, Auckland, New Zealand

^FDepartment of Paediatrics: Child and Youth Health, The University of Auckland, and Starship Children's Health, Auckland, New Zealand

*Correspondence to: Email: n.gauld@auckland.ac.nz

Supplementary File S1. Topics of discussion relevant to this manuscript

| Women | Health care providers |
|---|--|
| Awareness and knowledge about MVs Knowledge about pertussis and influenza illnesses Sources of information about MVs, probing on HCPs, friends, whānau, internet and promotional material Their journey to having or not having MVs from awareness, to influences on the MV decision, involvement of whānau, and where the MV was administered) Their recommendations of how to help more women have MVs Demographics: age, ethnicity, number of children, number of weeks' gestation when initially attending the LMC, number of weeks' gestation when interviewed, or infants' age if post-birth, whether or not their children received vaccinations | Their perceptions of women's awareness of MVs Their awareness and knowledge of MVs Their perceptions of the women's journey to having MVs Their perceptions of barriers and enablers for women to have MVs Their recommendations of how to help more women have MVs Demographics: job title, number of years' experience, whether their clients were low, medium or high socio-economic status, rural or urban location, and approximate number of hours worked per week |

MVs = maternal vaccinations

HCPs = health care professionals

Not all topics of discussion were raised with all participants