Supplementary Material

Restraint stress and elevation of corticotrophin-releasing hormone in female mice impair oocyte competence through activation of the tumour necrosis factor α (TNF-α) system

Xin-Yue Zhao^A, Zhi-Bin Li^A, Hong-Jie Yuan^A, Xiao Han^A, Jia-Shun Wu^A, Xiu-Yun Feng^A, Min Zhang^A and Jing-He Tan^A,B ^AShandong Provincial Key Laboratory of Animal Biotechnology and Disease Control and Prevention, College of Animal Science and Veterinary Medicine, Shandong Agricultural University, Tai’an City 271018, P. R. China.

^BCorresponding author. Email: tanjh@sdau.edu.cn
Fig. S1. TNF−/− mice information and their PCR homozygosity verification from Jackson laboratory. The homozygous mice show PCR product of 318 bp; heterozygotes show PCR products of 183 and 318 bp; and the wild-type mice show PCR product of 183 bp.