Supplementary material

Fire history and its drivers based on peatland charcoal analysis in the Changbai Mountains, Northeast China, during the last 13 000 years

Meng Meng\textsuperscript{D}, Dongmei Jie\textsuperscript{A,B,C,D,F}, Dehui Li\textsuperscript{D,F}, Nannan Li\textsuperscript{D}, Baojian Liu\textsuperscript{E}, Guizai Gao\textsuperscript{A,B,C,D}, Jiangyong Wang\textsuperscript{D}, Honghao Niu\textsuperscript{D}, Ying Liu\textsuperscript{D} and Guihua Zhang\textsuperscript{D}

\textsuperscript{A}Key Laboratory of Geographical Processes and Ecological Security in Changbai Mountains, Ministry of Education, Changchun 130024, China.
\textsuperscript{B}Institute for Peat and Mire Research, State Environmental Protection Key Laboratory of Wetland Ecology and Vegetation Restoration, Northeast Normal University, Renmin 5268, Changchun 130024, China.
\textsuperscript{C}Key Laboratory of Vegetation Ecology, Ministry of Education, Changchun 130024, China.
\textsuperscript{D}School of Geographical Sciences, Northeast Normal University, Renmin 5268, Changchun 130024, China.
\textsuperscript{E}School of Life Science, Jilin Normal University, Siping 136000, China.
\textsuperscript{F}Corresponding authors. Email: jiedongmei@nenu.edu.cn; lidh357@nenu.edu.cn
Fig S1. Photographs of the Gushantun Peatland.

!Gushantun Peatland photographs

Fig S2. ‘Bacon’ age-depth model of all of the data for the GST profile.

!GST age-depth model
Fig. S3. Age-depth model (sediment accumulation rates) of peat cores from the Gushantun peatland.